

Army Training

The Army has a non-negotiable contract with the American public to fight and win the nation's wars and to defend its borders. In order to carry out this responsibility in a complex operational environment, the Army must train as it fights. This means that we must teach our Soldiers the tactics, techniques, and procedures that they will face on the battlefield and we must ensure that our Soldiers practice these skills in an environment that replicates in real-time and real-distance, the challenges of combat. Realistic training leads to survivability on the battlefield.

We live in a world of ever changing threats. Therefore, the Army must transform to meet these new challenges and continue to provide our Soldiers with the realistic training they deserve.